SOTOL, RAICILLA, MEZCAL & TEQUILA

Sotol grows wild, particularly on the rocky slopes of the dry grasslands of the Chihuahua desert; and, unlike the blue agave used to make Tequila which flowers once and dies, desert-spoon agave can flower every few years. Sotol has a more subdued, grassy character, often with smoky and earthy undertones.

Raicilla (roots) hails from the Mexican states of Jalisco and Nayarit. There are two categories of raicilla: del la costa (coastal) and de la sierra (mountainous). Like wine, raicilla takes on much of the terroir characteristics of where it's grown. Raicilla is different still, offering a sweeter, softer take on Mezcal but still that roasted-agave robustness Mezcal can be made of 30 different varieties of agave, mostly by small-scale producers, and is typically smokey through the wood-fired ovens that cook the agave.

100 % Tequilas must be made from Weber blue agave, unlike Mixtos.

They all have the same classification: plata, reposado, añejo and extra añejo
